Growing with Chicken Tanzania

We will demonstrate our solutions and share knowledge in Kilacha Agriculture and Livestock Training Center (KALTC) our project partner in Tanzania. We cooperate with KALTC in setting up a production and training center, a demonstration broiler farm, and a demonstration layer farm, both with a capacity of 2500 birds. In addition to training staff to manage these farms, we are going to provide veterinarian services, training to farmers and other trainers. For this purpose, we develop tailor-made curricula and manuals. Next to technical and farm management issues, we will pay close attention to food safety and animal health aspects. As the training facility can accommodate large groups of participants this allows us to also serve other regions, such as the Dar es Salaam region.

Kukua Na Kuku Sustainable Poultry Sector Best Practices in Tanzania

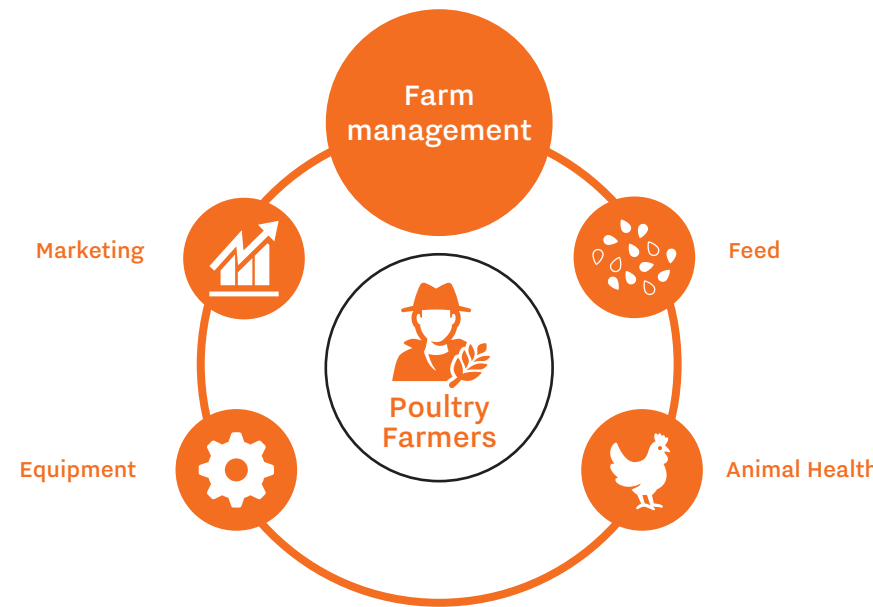

A collaboration between Tanzania and the Netherlands to transform Tanzania's poultry sector using Dutch technologies

Our ambition?

The promotion and support of the continuous development of the poultry sector in Tanzania is the ambition of the Kuku na Kuku (Growing with Chicken) impact cluster. Our aim is to enhance capacity building throughout the value chain in order to improve the efficiency and quality of production and to increase the demand for poultry products. In cooperation with local stakeholders we aim to establish a thriving and competitive Tanzanian poultry sector that is based on a sound business model.

The Netherlands and poultry

Tanzania and the Netherlands are important trade partners and maintain a valuable partnership towards a sustainable food sector. The poultry sector in the Netherlands is founded on family businesses and corporations who have been seeking long-term solutions for centuries. Our farmers are entrepreneurs. Innovation and highly-efficient production, in combination with working in partnerships with companies, knowledge institutes and government organisations, has made the Netherlands a global leader in the poultry sector. With this knowledge and experience, the Dutch sector can help to further develop the sector in Tanzania.

The story of Kuku Na Kuku (Growing with Chicken)

The poultry sector in Tanzania is emerging steadily both in indigenous and exotic chicken and has great potential. For the past few years, Tanzania's population has been growing rapidly increasing the demand for animal protein. The potential of the poultry sector in Tanzania opens opportunities for investments. Growing with Chicken was built to unlock Tanzania's potential in poultry and to make the poultry sector a dynamic, vibrant and competitive sector.

As a cluster of Dutch companies the 'Kuku na Kuku' (Growing with Chicken) partnership promises farmers to increase their efficiency, productivity and the quality of their produce by learning from the cluster's agricultural expertise and experience. We aim to improve farm management, animal health, marketing and ensure the availability of quality feed and suitable equipment. We believe that by investing in the entire value chain the sector will be unlocking its full potential and, in turn, will catalyze the growth of demand for good quality poultry products. By setting up a training facility and demonstration farm we invest in the future as this will allow a transfer of knowledge and expertise throughout the entire value chain. Furthermore, we believe in future-proof solutions; in addition to training a large numbers of farmers on farm management, we will also improve the further dissemination of this acquired knowledge by developing the trainees' educational skills.
